Washington Men Are the Best Dressed Men In the United States.

And we have helped to give them this reputation. Nowhere in the world has clothing reached the perfection in style and workmanship that it has here.

Every day we have visits from manufacturers and merchants from all over the country, who examine the lines and admire the style of our "M. S. M." (Man's Store Make) productions in suits and overcoats.

And not only do we excel in the style and quality of our clothing, but we undersell in price—we save you money on every purchase you make at the Man's Store.

You may think that all spring clothing is much alike, but you'll find ours different—superior—full of snap and style—and the best fitting garments you ever tried on.

MEMORIES REVIVED BY HANCOCK'S MEN

Second Army Corps Unites at Annual Banquet.

GEN. MILES MAKES ADDRESS

Veterans of Every Important Engagement in the Civil War Re-count Exploits of Four-year Struggle at Feast Given at the Arlington-McCall Honors Calhoun.

Those who are left of Gen. Winfield S. Hancock's Second Army Corps, veterans of every important engagement in the civil war, gathered last night in a feast of memory at their yearly dinner at the Arlington Hotel.

The usual routine of dinner speeches was abandoned and, instead, the soldiers of the most daring division of the Union army fought the old battles again in vivid description. Old, half-forgotten camp fires blazed again, at feast in memory.

In the place of the usual exchange of wit, there were silent toasts to long dead comrades and tender reminiscences of Hancock and his men, enlivened now and then by a laughable anecdote of camp life or a story of the firing line.

The exploits of every regiment in the division were recounted by men who had known the whine of a Minie ball, and when some spring of vivid remembrance was touched of the grim days of '61 and '62, the veterans arose and waved their napkins and cheered with all the fire of youth.

Dr. William Tindall, president of the Second Army Corps Association, was toastmaster. He called upon Gen. Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A., retired, for the first address.

"You may search the pages of history and you will not find a military organization that fought in so many engagements with so much credit to their colors as the Second division of Grant's invincible army," said the general.

"You men should be glad that you are alive to-night to be here to honor those who have gone before, and you should be proud of your record in those stormy times and in the years that followed."

Letter of Praise.

He read the following extract from a letter from Gen. Hancock to Gen. Grant as the best possible tribute to the division: "It is perhaps known to you that this corps had never lost a color or a gun previous to this campaign, though often and more desperately engaged than any other corps in this army, or perhaps in any other in the country. I have not the means of knowing exactly the number of guns and colors captured, but I saw myself nine in the hands of one division at Antietam, and the official reports show that thirty-four fell into the hands of that corps at Gettysburg."

Before the opening of this campaign it had at least captured more than half a hundred colors, though at cost of over 2,000 casualties. During this campaign you can judge how well the corps has performed its part. It has captured more guns and colors than all the rest of the army combined. Its reverses have not been many, and they have been only when the corps had dwindled to a remnant of its former strength; after it had lost twenty-five brigade commanders and over one hundred and twenty-five regimental commanders, and over 20,000 men.

Representative McCall, of Massachusetts, paid another high tribute to the corps, and incidentally he spoke of the gift of South Carolina to Statuary Hall of a statue of John C. Calhoun, whom he declared represented a different idea from the one the men before him fought for, but who should be honored for his good works.

Capt. Orville Dewey Thatcher proposed a toast to those who fell on the field of battle and those who have left the ranks since Lee's surrender. With bowed heads the veterans stood reverently while a bugler played "Taps."

Gen. J. Warren Keifer said no better women ever lived than those who were the "Florence Nightingales" of the war between the States. He offered a toast to "The Ladies," giving them credit for half the victories and a thousand courageous deeds.

Capt. H. C. Magoon graphically told an incident in the history of the First Minnesota Regiment at the front, and Col. George A. Arnes described Gen. Hancock's staff. Gen. George B. Davis related what the present officers of the association were doing fifty years ago. Resolutions were presented by Capt. H. C. Kirk in memory of the late Maj. R. W. Taylor.

Gen. I. R. Sherman spoke of the literature of the war period, and Capt. T. M. Wilson and Capt. Alfred Stophor won applause with songs.

The Guests.

Holds Building Inspector.
 Capt. Kelly Would Fix Responsibility for Fire Escape.

Assistant Engineer Commissioner Kelly yesterday recommended that responsibility for the fire escape law be placed upon the inspector of buildings, except such buildings as are required by law to be licensed.

Capt. Kelly says that under present orders the enforcement of the fire escape law with respect to all buildings coming thereunder in the District is fixed jointly upon the fire department and the building department. The law requires the heads of both these departments to certify as to compliance with the law in the case of all buildings which are required to be licensed, but in all other buildings coming under the law there would seem to be no necessity for dual control.

KANSAS COLLEGIANS DINE.

Representative Calderhead Tells of the State's Superiority.

Incidents of college days were recalled last night at the annual banquet of the Kansas University Club at the Cochran Hotel. It was one of those informal affairs where every one does as he chooses and speaks when so disposed. Those who failed to offer a toast to their alma mater joined in the song of the "Crimson and Blue."

Representative Charles F. Scott was toastmaster, and, after saying a few words about the "K. S. U.," he introduced Representative W. A. Calderhead as the guest of honor.

Mr. Calderhead said the people of Kansas are the greatest people on earth, leaving their impression wherever they go.

"Why," he said, "one of its illustrious daughters accomplished what no other living mortal ever did. She pushed into oblivion that famous hatchet of George Washington."

"I remember the time when it was nothing out of the ordinary to go into a buffet down there and hear the men behind the bar exclaiming: 'Is this a hatchet I see before me?'"

A feature of the banquet that attracted much attention was the cover of the menu. The design was an old Dutch mill, done in water colors by Mrs. Lona Miller Kepling.

SURPLUS IN RAILWAY DEPOSIT.

Auditor Tweedale Recommends Balance Be Returned to Companies.

Auditor Tweedale yesterday submitted to the Commissioners a statement of deposits made by railway companies to the District, on account of pay of special policemen at street railway crossings from 1888 to 1910, inclusive, the amount charged, and the surplus remaining over February 28, 1910.

He says that under an act of Congress the Commissioners are required to station special policemen at street railway crossings at the expense of the railway companies. From August 15, 1888, to February 28, 1910, the companies have deposited $265,619.13, but there has only been paid during this period $264,271.41, leaving a balance of $1,347.72.

As the District is not entitled to this balance, the auditor recommends the amount be returned to the railway companies. According to the amount paid in, the Capital Traction Company should receive 31.8 per cent and the Washington Railway and Electric Company 68.12 per cent.
